From the Superintendent's Desk

Are We Too Busy?

Legendary UCLA basketball coach John Wooden once said, "Don't mistake activity for achievement." That quote has been on my mind lately.

I'll be honest…there have been days recently where I feel like I'm just spinning my wheels. The to-do list on my desk doesn't seem to get any shorter. In fact, most days it feels like it grows faster than I can check things off. Meetings, emails, phone calls, events, decisions. All of these things are important, but at the end of some days, I've caught myself wondering if I focused on the right things or just the next things on my list.

In our culture, being busy is often seen as a positive. If you're busy, you must be productive. If your calendar is full, you must be important. But I'm not so sure that's always true. There's a difference between being busy and making progress. Our students feel this too. They have homework, practices, games, music events, FFA activities, jobs, and other commitments. These are all great opportunities that build responsibility and character. At the same time, we have to help them understand balance. There's a difference between being involved and being overwhelmed. Between being committed and being consumed.

The same applies to us as adults. When we never slow down, we rarely take time to evaluate whether our efforts are aligned with what matters most, like our families, our health, our faith, and the relationships around us. Sometimes the most productive thing we can do is step back, refocus, and be intentional about where we're investing our time and energy.

As we move through another busy stretch of the school year, I encourage all of us (myself included) to pause and ask a simple question: "Am I just staying busy, or am I making progress on what truly matters?" Let's work hard and stay committed…But let's also make sure our activity is leading to achievement, and that we're not just spinning our wheels along the way.

Spring Activities/Sports

As the basketball season begins to wind down, there are still plenty of activities that are going on. Acalympics, FFA, music concerts and contests, and archery are just a few of the activities that will happen in March. Several spring sports will also begin in March:

- Track practice will begin on Monday, March 2. The coaches will be Tammy Heinrich, Audra Montgomery, and Ben Menapace.
- Elementary Volleyball will begin on Monday, March 9. The coaches will be Wendy Waleri and Jacie Connell.
- Baseball practice will begin on Monday, March 16. The coach will be Danny Fischer.
- Softball practice (co-op with Jamestown) will begin on Monday, March 16.

More detailed schedules will be provided in the coming weeks. Please check our school website for up-to-date information on activities and schedules. Good luck to everyone as we begin the last quarter of the year!

Parent-Teacher Conferences—March 19
No School on March 20

Parent-Teacher Conferences will be held on Thursday, March 19 from 1:30-7:30. School will also dismiss at 1:15 on this day. Parent-teacher conferences are a great way to get involved in the education of your children. Having a face-to-face conversation with your child's teacher can give a better understanding of how your child is progressing and can provide valuable feedback for how you can support your child at home. I encourage all parents to attend conferences and look forward to seeing all of you on March 19. March 20 is a parent-teacher compensation day for our teachers so school will not be in session on this day.

PRINCIPAL'S MESSAGE

What time of year is the busiest at your house? I usually think of the holidays, but I could make a strong case that this season is the busiest. Between sports schedules, important learning time at school, guest speakers, and off-campus opportunities, the calendar fills up quickly. When life gets busy, I tend to feel stressed. And when I feel stressed, I don't always give myself — or the people around me — enough grace. That realization pushed me to spend some time reflecting on what it really means to extend grace to ourselves and others. Hopefully these reminders are helpful in busy seasons, as well as the slower ones.

What words come to mind when you think about giving grace? Forgiveness, understanding, compassion — especially when times are challenging or mistakes happen. Grace supports our mental well-being and encourages growth. It's choosing kindness over judgment, both toward others and toward ourselves. Some of us find it easier to extend grace to others, while others struggle more with self-compassion. It can be helpful to notice where you might want to grow, because strengthening either area supports your overall well-being.

Giving yourself grace means treating yourself with the same kindness you would offer a friend. Allow yourself to make mistakes — perfection isn't realistic. We don't expect perfection from others, so we shouldn't demand it from ourselves. Set realistic expectations and achievable goals. When you feel overwhelmed, give your mind and body permission to rest. Think of the familiar instruction on an airplane: "Put on your own oxygen mask before helping others." You simply can't show up well for the people around you if you're running on empty.

Extending grace to others begins with assuming good intentions. We rarely know the full story of what someone else is carrying from day to day. Patience matters. If someone is struggling or falling behind, a simple offer of support can go a long way. Strong connections are built through trust, empathy, and relationships that are safe from judgment.

As we move through this busy season, let's be intentional about choosing grace — at home, at school, and within ourselves. Life will always have stressful times, but grace gives us room to breathe, to learn, and to grow. When we practice it consistently, we create a culture where mistakes become opportunities, relationships grow stronger, and people feel supported. And that's a gift worth carrying with us, in all the seasons.

Mrs. Tara Hofmann, Principal

BREAKFAST LOGIC

When students need to take achievement tests, schools strongly urge them to eat breakfast first on testing days. Why? Because we know that when students eat balanced meal, they perform better academically and are better able to concentrate. Yet on "normal" days, many students fail to eat breakfast: they're too busy, they're too tired, they don't know what to eat. This is why School Breakfast is offered. Let's help students to perform better every day, not just on testing days, by making sure they eat a healthy breakfast at home or at school. MPS offers breakfast every morning starting at 8:05. All students are welcome every day!

STUTSMAN COUNTY SPELLING BEE

This year, our school Spelling Bee looked a little different. Due to the changes at the county Spelling Bee, we were able to send 4 students in grades 5-8 to the Stutsman County Spelling Bee. Those 4 students were:

Jayden Carlson
Jaelee Tripp
McKenna Connell
Emelia Greer

At the Stutsman County Spelling Bee, McKenna took 2nd and Jaelee took 3rd.

Tips Families Can Use to Help Children Do Better in School

March 2026

Medina Public School

Make a difference to your child by getting involved with school

Students are the winners when families and schools work together. Family engagement in education leads to increased academic achievement, improved attendance and better student attitudes and behavior.

If you haven't been involved much this year, it's not too late to become an active partner in your child's education. Engaging doesn't have to be complicated or time consuming.

There is plenty of time left in the year to:

- Stay informed of issues, events and important dates by regularly checking school communications sent home and posted online.
- Take part in school events for families, particularly those that involve your child. Make an effort to connect with staff and other families.
- Reach out to your child's teachers. Ask questions, such as "What school skills should I work with my child on before the end of the year? What strategies can we try?" Ask about opportunities to help the class.
- Talk with your child every day about school. Ask about classes and what your student is learning. Make it clear that education matters to you.
- Join the parent-teacher group. Learn about ways families are making a positive impact at school, and how you can help.

Add to your child's math vocabulary

Did you know that learning vocabulary is a key math skill? If students have to stop to think about the meaning of words like product or quotient, they can lose their focus on what they are doing and get confused.

To help with math vocabulary-building, encourage your child to:

- Connect words and symbols. Have your child make flash cards with a symbol on one side and the word it represents on the other.
- Make a drawing that shows the term doing the thing it represents. A circumference, for example, is the distance around the edge of a circle. Your child could draw a circle with the word circumference written around the rim.
- Think about word parts. Many math words share a common root. Noticing this can help your child connect new terms to familiar ones. If the new word is centimeter, for example, talk about how there are 100 *cent*s in a dollar, 100 years in a *cent*ury, and 100 *cent*imeters in a meter.

Set expectations that fit

Keep two things in mind when setting expectations for your elementary schooler:

1. Children generally live up to family expectations for them, high or low. So set the bar high for your child.
2. Effective expectations are realistic and achievable—and geared to your child.

Praise your child's effort and progress, and encourage your child to take pride in both.

This writing is fast and fun

Quick Writes are an enjoyable way to help your child practice getting ideas down on paper. Set a timer for three minutes and present a writing prompt, such as:

- When I woke up I was a different person. I was … .
- Something that's important to know about me is … .
- Something difficult I have done and how I did it.
- Something I'd like to learn and why.

Then, each of you write everything you can about the prompt until the timer rings. Afterward, share and discuss what you wrote.

Siblings open reading doors

When kids see an older sibling reading for fun, they are more likely to want to read themselves. Siblings are also handy resources for suggesting, sharing and discussing books.

Get the ball rolling by planning a weekly family time for pleasure reading. To prepare, take your children to the library together. Let your younger child watch the big kids browsing and reading.

ELEMENTARY SCHOOL
Helping Children Learn®
Tips Families Can Use to Help Children Do Better in School — March 2026

Q&A My child is feeling excluded. What should I do?

Q: My nine-year-old doesn't have many friends. One child who used to spend time with mine has moved on to another friend group. That group is teasing my child—who now doesn't want to go to school. Should I talk to the ex-friend's family? How else can I help?

A: Fourth grade social drama can have a big effect on a child's outlook on school. Since the teasing is affecting your child's willingness to go to school, you are right to get involved. But calling the other family is unlikely to help—and it could result in more heartache for your child. Instead:

- Contact the teacher. Explain the problem and ask for help making your child feel welcome and a part of classroom activities. Teasing and exclusion are forms of bullying, and the teacher will want to prevent it.
- Find out about school-based activities and organizations that might interest your child. Spending time with other students who also enjoy singing or chess can help your child find a friend group at school.
- Look for organized after-school programs. Sometimes, a structured setting makes it easier for kids to get along.

If the teasing or reluctance to go to school continue, make an appointment with the school counselor to learn more ways to support your child.

Parent Quiz Are you setting a behavior example?

When it comes to learning behavior, children pay more attention to what adults do than what they say. Are you modeling the behavior you want your child to show at home and at school? Answer yes or no below:

___1. Do you show respect for your child and others by treating them kindly and honestly?

___2. Do you admit mistakes, apologize and try to make amends—and expect your child to do the same?

___3. Do you make eye contact and listen attentively when your child speaks to you?

___4. Do you vent strong feelings in healthy ways?

___5. Do you enforce household rules and consequences fairly and consistently?

How well are you doing?

More yes answers mean you are demonstrating how to behave civilly toward others. For each no, try that idea.

"Civility costs nothing, and buys everything."
—Mary Wortley Montagu

Build test-taking confidence

When students doubt their ability to do well on tests, anxiety can affect their performance. To erase your child's self-doubt:

- Encourage effective preparation. Your child should begin studying several days in advance and focus on material not yet mastered.
- Ease the pressure. Tell your child tests just show what students have learned and what they may need help with.
- Suggest self-talk to address nervousness. Your child can repeat, "I know this material and I am prepared to do well."

Give science a fun spin

Here's an egg-cellent experiment you can do with your child right in your own kitchen:

1. Get two eggs in their shells—one raw and one hard-boiled.
2. Place the eggs on the table. Can your child identify which one is which without cracking them?

3. Have your child place each egg on its side and spin it. The raw egg will wobble, while the hard-boiled egg will spin smoothly. Why? The yolk and white of the raw egg are liquid, so they shift when spun. This affects the egg's center of gravity and makes it wobbly.

Playtime has a purpose

Playing and having fun can reduce children's stress and boost their mental and physical well-being. For the most benefit:

- Encourage active play that gets your child's heart pumping.
- Make playtime screen-free.
- Play with your child. Family play is great for strengthening supportive bonds.
