Community Education Newsletter

From the Superintendent's Desk

As we turn the page to April, it's hard to believe how quickly the school year has gone. Spring is always busy and there's still plenty of activities happening as we head into the final stretch.

Our boys' basketball team recently returned from the state tournament where they finished in 4th place. I'd like to extend a huge congratulations to our players and coaches. This is an incredible accomplishment and it's the highest finish in our school's history! Thank you to our players, coaches, and everyone who supported our team on their trip to the state tournament.

As we move into the final months of the school year, it's important that we continue to stay focused. April and May can sometimes feel like a sprint to the finish, but this is also a critical time to focus on learning. I wan to encourage all of our students to remain diligent in their studies, stay engaged, and continue putting forth your best effort every day. Success doesn't happen by accident. It's built through consistent effort, good habits, and commitment. This is especially true when things get tough or when the weather starts getting nicer!

Thank you to our staff, students, and families for the continued support of our school. Let's finish the year strong!

PRINCIPAL'S MESSAGE

One of the simplest and most powerful ways we can continue to strengthen our community is to be a better greeter. A warm greeting—whether it's a smile, a wave, or a quick "good morning"—sets the tone for the entire day. It tells others they are seen, valued, and welcome. As a school and community, we take pride in the strong connections we've built, and those connections often begin with these small, meaningful moments.

Showing love and kindness doesn't require grand gestures. It can be found in the everyday interactions we sometimes take for granted. One way we can do this is to greet everyone, even when it isn't easy. Taking a moment to acknowledge someone who may be having a tough day or someone who we don't naturally connect with can make a bigger impact than we realize. Being present in those moments, putting aside distractions, and truly seeing one another helps build a culture of respect and care.

We see the power of these connections every day throughout our school. From students greeting staff and staff greeting students in the hallways with smiles—and sometimes even hugs—to the conversations shared about events and activities, these interactions create a sense of belonging. When we take time to connect beyond the classroom—at games, concerts, and school gatherings—we strengthen the relationships that make our school and community such a special place.

Our connections are strong, and that is something to be proud of. I was reminded of those strong connections and support this past weekend at the State Basketball Tournament. The support was overwhelming, in the best way. At the same time, there is always room to grow. Let's continue to challenge ourselves to be better greeters—to reach out, to be present, and to lead with kindness. When we do, we not only strengthen our school and communities, but we also help our students learn the lifelong value of building positive, meaningful relationships.

COUNSELOR CONNECTION

April is National Child Abuse Prevention (CAP) Month, a time to recognize that everyone plays a role in protecting children and supporting families. This initiative emphasizes the importance of strong communities, supportive relationships, and education to help keep children safe.

To support these efforts, throughout the month of April, we will be providing age-appropriate & student friendly lessons for grades PK–5. These lessons are designed to help children understand personal safety in a way that is appropriate for their age and development.

Students will learn about topics such as the difference between "safe" and "unsafe" touches, the importance of personal boundaries, and what to do if they feel uncomfortable or unsafe. Our goal Is to empower students with simple, practical strategies to help keep themselves safe.

Here are a few ways parents and guardians can support these efforts at home:

- Review the booklet that will be sent home following your child's lesson
- Stay connected and involved with the people in your child's life
- Encourage your child to trust their instincts and speak up if something doesn't feel right
- Learn the signs of child abuse
- Report suspected abuse — Call 1-800-4-A-CHILD or contact local law enforcement

We will be utilizing resources purchased through Channing Bete Company for these lessons. If you would like to preview the booklet that will be used with your child's class, please contact me at the school before April 13.

Tips Families Can Use to Help Children Do Better in School

Give your elementary schooler the facts about how students learn

Studies show that some common ideas about learning and how to do it effectively aren't supported by evidence—and they may even get in the your child's way.

Here are some myths to be aware of, along with research-based facts to discuss with your child:

- Myth: Everyone has one "style" of learning that works best for them. The fact is children learn in all kinds of ways, and they often learn material better by using multiple strategies—reading, listening, looking at pictures, drawing diagrams, making models, etc.
- Myth: Talent matters more than effort. The fact is learning and achieving in school requires persistence, practice and self-control. Students who work hard often do better than "gifted" peers who goof off.
- Myth: Reading and rereading material in one long session the night before a test is the best way to study. The fact is it's more effective to practice recalling the material in several short study sessions spread out over time.
- Myth: Left-brained people are better at math and right-brained people are better at art. The fact is there is no proof that one side of the brain dominates during learning—or at all.

Family meetings foster cooperation

Holding regular family meetings provides your child with opportunities to develop cooperation skills—such as communication and negotiation—and you all get a chance to reconnect. To make meetings benefit your family:

- Choose a regular time— once every week or two. Family members should also be able to request a meeting if they have something important to discuss.
- Create an agenda. Before each meeting, ask family members what topics they want to discuss.
- Appoint a leader. The leader should follow the agenda and make sure everyone gets a chance to speak. Initially the leader should be an adult. Let children take a turn leading once meetings become familiar.
- Problem-solve. Have family members take turns explaining how they feel about an issue. Brainstorm solutions together, with adults having the final say. Write down decisions to revisit and evaluate at future meetings.

Recharge concentration

Everybody gets distracted from time to time. But when students regularly "zone out" when studying or doing schoolwork, it affects their ability to learn. To boost your child's focus:

- Minimize distractions. Turn off TVs and loud music. Avoid interruptions that can wait.
- Help your child divide large tasks into smaller, less overwhelming pieces.
- Encourage "brain breaks." Suggest that your child take a five-minute break after every 20 minutes of studying.

Model aspects of respect

Respectful behavior takes many forms. Help your child learn how to show them by experiencing them. Show your child:

- Consideration. Avoid embarrassing or making fun of your child.
- Fairness. Don't pass judgment on your child before learning all the facts.
- Dependability. If you tell your child you'll do something, do it.

Set goals for a strong finish

Your elementary schooler has come a long way since September. But there is still plenty of time left in the year to set and achieve learning goals. Review these steps together:

1. Identify the goal. Make it specific.
2. Define specific steps to take for meeting the goal.
3. Post the goal prominently and discuss it with others to build accountability.
4. Carry out the plan.
5. Celebrate when the goal is met!

Q&A Deployment has unsettled my child. How can I help?

Q: My spouse is deployed overseas and won't be home for several more months. This is challenging for our third grader, whose schoolwork is starting to suffer. What can I do to help my child cope and get back on track over the next few months?

A: Having a loved one be away for months at a time is hard for anyone. Here are some ways to help your child:

- Acknowledge feelings. Say something like, "We love Daddy very much. Of course we miss him. Whenever you feel sad, you can tell me."
- Alert your child's teacher to what's happening so the school can respond appropriately. Ask for suggestions for helping at home.
- Stick to daily routines at home. Consistent routines give children a sense of stability and predictability.
- Encourage your child to stay in touch with your spouse with phone calls, video messages and email.
- Reach out to friends, family and other military families who have had similar experiences. They can offer ideas for coping.
- Look for ways your child can help others. This helps kids put their own problems into perspective.

Parent Quiz Are you supporting school success?

Decades of research show that when families and schools work as a team, students are the real winners. Are you playing your part in making your child's education a success? Answer yes or no to the questions below:

1. Do you make sure your child attends school every day on time and prepared to learn?
2. Do you ask your child about school every day and review all communications the school sends home?
3. Do you review your child's schoolwork? If your child is struggling with a subject, do you ask the teacher how you can help?
4. Do you share information about your child with teachers?
5. Do you reinforce school rules and the need to follow them?

How well are you doing?

More yes answers mean you are a valuable player on your child's family-school team. For each no, try that idea.

"The strength of the team is each individual member. The strength of each member is the team."
—Phil Jackson

Transform text into poems

April is National Poetry Month. Writing blackout poems is a creative and fun way to celebrate with your child. You'll each need a page of text from a magazine or newspaper and a black marker. To create a poem:

1. Scan the words in the text to get an idea for your poem.
2. Underline the words and phrases that will make up your poem. The words should appear in your poem in the same order they do in the text.
3. Black out the remaining text with the marker to see your poem pop!

Discuss discipline's purpose

Maintaining discipline is easier when you involve your child from the start. Talk with your elementary schooler about discipline. Why is it helpful? How does it work? Take your child's ideas into consideration when establishing rules and consequences. Then, reinforce the behaviors you want to see by noticing and offering praise when your child displays them.

Instill a can-do attitude

When students encounter difficulty learning, some say "I'm just not good at this" and quit trying. But other kids say "This is a challenge, and I love a challenge!"

The can-do attitude of the children in the second group makes them more likely to stick with problems—and solve them. Encourage this attitude by offering praise for effort and persistence. "That was challenging, but you kept trying different things until you got it!"
