School Counseling Connection with Ms. Melton:

Helpfulness-Have you noticed your child doing something kind or helpful? Saying it out loud helps them see it, too. You might say, “I saw you hold the door open for your sister,” “You were really patient when I was on the phone,” or “I noticed you gave your friend a turn without being asked.” These everyday moments might feel small, but noticing and naming them helps your child build a habit of kindness and see themselves as someone who cares for others.

ForCaregivers: Ichoosetonotice and name the good I see in myself and my child.

For Students: I feel proud when someone sees the kind things I do.

ABC’s of Stress: Use the “ABC” method to help your child manage stress. A for Acceptance: Encourage them to acknowledge and embrace their experiences and feelings without judgment. B for Breaks: Remind your child to step away from tasks or stressful situations to recharge their minds and bodies. C for Circle of Control: Help your child identify what they can and cannot control. This reminds them they can always control their thoughts and responses, regardless of the challenge.

Research shows that short breaks — whether through physical activity or mindfulness — help support children's comprehension in school. Suggest fun activities like going for a walk, reading a book, or even creating DIY stress balls together.

Stress can feel overwhelming, but kids can learn to handle it with your support. Keep routines steady, offer quiet time after school, and use tools like a fidget toy, breathing video, or coloring page to help them relax and reset. You might say, “Let’s take a break together” or “Let’s make a calm-down plan” during stressful moments. These simple strategies can help kids feel safe, supported, and better able to work through stress.

For Caregivers: I can notice signs of stress and guide my child through it.

For Students: I can notice when I feel stressed and use tools that help me feel better.
