About Me:

This will be my 10th year in education, with experience teaching middle school math and art before starting in Special Education. My husband and I have two sons, Ezra, a 5th grader at Washington Irving and Max, who will be 2 years old this year. As a family, we love spending time outdoors kayaking on the river, board games, and watching sports and movies. I enjoy reading and cooking and spending time with the people I love. I am excited for my first year at Washington Irving!

My why for being in education:

I have a deep passion for helping students be the best they can be in school, with their families, and in life. I strive to ensure that every student I come in contact with feels loved and that someone knows they can do great things. I believe that all students can learn, even if in an unconventional way and that all students can show growth -- in many different ways! I want each child to know they have something wonderful to offer and that I can't wait to see what that is.
