Community Update:

The month of January saw a higher than normal amount of weather-related school cancellations, and we want to update our community on the district's instructional hours status.

Several years ago, the state of Ohio moved from a specific number of "calamity days" to a minimum number of "instructional hours" required for schools.

Our district calendar is planned so that the Bucyrus City School District proudly operates well above the required minimum number of instructional hours. The district closely tracks these numbers, monitors conditions with student and staff safety in mind and looks to instill career-minded values and habits into our students.

At this time, even with the recent closures, all grade levels in the district remain above the required minimum number of instructional hours. This means that in-person make-up days are not currently being planned. They would be considered only if instructional hours fall below the required state minimum.

The district will continue to share updates if significant additional closures cause this status to change.

Sincerely,

Robert A. Britton, Superintendent
