

Helping Kids Cope with a Divorce

---

Since about 1 out of 2 marriages in the U.S. end in divorce, many American children are affected by divorce each year. Those kids often feel trapped in the middle as the family splits up. If mommy and daddy don't love each other, they wonder, do they love me?

Anger, fear, separation anxiety, a sense of abandonment, sadness, and embarrassment are common reactions for most children. Some children may feel they are to blame for the divorce.

During the first couple of years after a divorce, your stress may get in the way of your ability to parent well. You can help make sure your children have a healthier transition when you:

- Tell them you love them. And tell them often. Provide a secure relationship with both parents.
- Be open and honest. Explain in terms of their age the basic reason for your divorce. Your children must be told that they're not to blame. Please don't wait until the last moment to tell them about the divorce. If possible, tell your child together.
- Respect your child's relationship with the other parent. Children should be able to spend time with each parent and express love for each parent without feeling guilty
- Keep your kids out of it. Your divorce is between you and your spouse. Don't use your children as pawns, spies, or marriage counselors. Be sure to tell them that it's not their fault, and don't share more information than your child is asking for. Don't discuss each other's faults or problems with the child.
- Don't pull your children into your arguments. If they are not part of the argument, keep them out of it.
- Don't criticize each other in front of your child or when your child can overhear you. If this does happen, talk to your child and explain that when people are very angry they sometimes say things that are mean and hurtful.
- Provide consistency. Coordinate with your ex-spouse about having the same house rules, bedtime, curfew, extracurricular activities, and favorite foods. As much as possible, try and keep the child's predivorce routine, for example school schedule, after school sports or clubs, or peer activities.

- Offer professional help. This could be individual counseling or a divorce group. Community agencies, schools, or courts provide them. Admit that the situation is sad and upsetting for everyone. Talk to your child's school psychologist or counselor if they need more emotional support.

Seek professional help for yourself. Having an objective person to talk to can help you and your child. The better you can cope, the more support you can provide to your child.

If your kids aren't overwhelmed by feelings of responsibility surrounding your divorce, they'll generally mature sooner. They will also become more independent and have higher self-esteem than kids left with unresolved feelings of responsibility and guilt.

You and your spouse once loved each other. Remind your children of this, and that from that love, they are the greatest gift.

This Month's Webinar

- Helping You and Your Child Adjust to Divorce

It's no surprise that the breakup of your marriage is tough on your child no matter their age. Supporting them as they react to your divorce, while also managing your own feelings, can be challenging. In this session, we will learn how to lend comfort – not confusion – to an already difficult situation and at the same time, help you manage your own feelings and anxiety. We will discuss how to adjust new living situations and effectively communicate with your ex-partner. The concrete tools, strategies, and supportive resources you'll gain during this session will help both you and your child to thrive throughout the divorce process and beyond.

- Log-in any time this month to watch the webinar!

---