Buckley Institute Essay Contest	William F. Buckley, Jr.'s founding of National Review in 1955 successfully empowered a new conservative movement that "stands athwart history, yelling Stop, at a time when no one is inclined to do so, or to have much patience with those who so urge it " Buckley called upon conservatives (though it need not solely be their task) to preserve history's worthiest traditions and values amidst America's rapid social developments. What about today? How do citizens of all parties balance this preservation with lightning social developments, and what do we risk with unfettered progress? What cultural, social, or political ideals should be held sacred against innovation, and are our social institutions strong enough to survive the pressures of warranted and necessary progress? Whether conservative, progressive, or independent, what does it mean to yell Stop today? High School Contest Current high school students should submit a response of between 700 and 800 words.
