Dear Parents/Guardians:

As many within our community are aware, public school operating budgets in New Jersey rely predominantly on local property taxes and state aid from the New Jersey Department of Education (NJDOE). The structural inequities inherent in this distribution framework have long been a subject of critical debate—most notably due to the disproportionate financial weight placed upon local property taxpayers.

A state task force has now been convened to re-examine and redesign New Jersey's school funding formula, opening a vital window for public commentary and civic engagement. How can our educational institutions maintain infrastructure safety, preserve optimal class sizes, and adapt to rising cost-of-living pressures without comprehensive fiscal reform? This is a pivotal moment to shape the future of public education policy across our state.

Direct opportunities to influence state educational policy are rare. We encourage all stakeholders to review the task force initiative and participate in this crucial dialogue.
