Over the past two years, school districts across Texas have not received official accountability rating due to pending lawsuits, one of which was recently resolved in favor of the Texas Education Agency (TEA). This allowed TEA to release the A-F accountability ratings for the 2022-23 school year. We are writing to share important information regarding our district's 2023 accountability rating. Our district received an overall rating reflecting significant challenges in key areas of student achievement, school progress and closing the gaps. The ratings provide valuable insight into areas for growth and improvement; however, they do not fully capture the hard work and dedication of our staff, students and parents.

Although the academic performance from the 2022-23 school year (two years ago) did not meet expectations, it served as a catalyst for change. Based on preliminary calculations, we anticipate a much improved rating for the 23-24 school year (last year). We should have ratings for this school year in August.
